

EVIDENCE OF GENOCIDE IN BRAZIL

Brazil is a UN founding member but did not join the Global Depopulation Policy until 1965. As a result, its total fertility rate declined from more than 6 children per woman prior to 1965 to just 1.8 today and has been below replacement level since 2001.

Brazil has accomplished this decline through fluoridated water in the cities and fluoride veneer applications by dentists throughout the country, which is why Brazil has far more dentists per capita than any other Latin American country and nearly four times more dentists than Canada or the US. Brazil also mandates fluoride in bottled water so that its citizens cannot escape the sterilization program by drinking bottled water.

To be able to institute covert depopulation measures, the architects of the Global Depopulation Policy in the U.S., U.K., the Soviet Union and at the U.N. needed to install a military dictatorship in Brazil. Field Marshal Castelo Branco was therefore encouraged to seize power in 1964 through a coup d'état and as soon as he became President and assumed emergency powers under the First Institutional Act he began poisoning his people with fluoridated water.

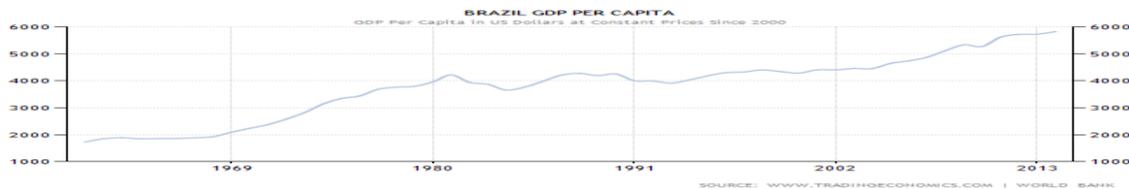

His military dictatorship was bankrolled by the World Bank, the IMF and various American corporations involved in the Global Depopulation Policy. Branco's military dictatorship was propagated until all opposition to covert depopulation measures had been silenced.

The covert depopulation program was continued, accelerated and intensified by Army General Artur da Costa e Silva from 1967 to 1969, by the Brazilian Military Junta of 1969, by Army General Emílio Garrastazu Médici from 1969 to 1974, by Army General Ernesto Geisel from 1974 to 1979, and finally by Army General and former Chief of the Secret Service João Figueiredo from 1979 to 1985, all of whom served as presidents of Brazil during this two-decade-long military dictatorship placed in power specifically to commit genocide in the name of the UN-delegated and western-financed Global Depopulation Policy.

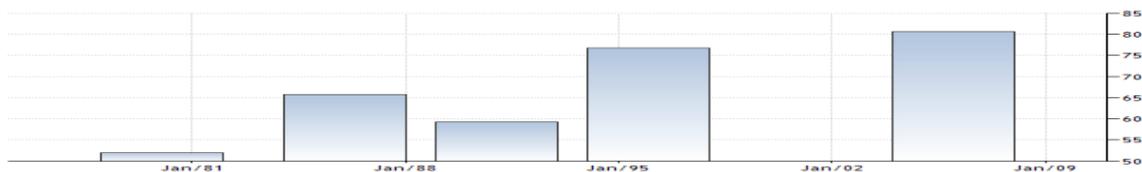

Once the depopulation program was firmly entrenched and all opposition to it eliminated, the military dictators were replaced with Brazil's oligarchs in 1985 when José Sarney became president of Brazil and continued to poison his people with the same fervor as the generals before him. Sarney was followed by the first president of Brazil directly elected by the people, Fernando Collor de Mello (1990-1992), then by Itamar Franco (1992-1995), both of whom continued to poison the Brazilian people with abandon.

Brazil's covert depopulation program did not ease up until Fernando Henrique Cardoso, a noted sociologist, was elected president in 1995. The program was further humanized by Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva (2003-2011), the founder of the Worker's Party, who was elected President in 2003 and finally sidelined the country's parasitical elites from power. Nevertheless covert depopulation continued under President Lula and continues to this day under incumbent President Dilma Rousseff (in office since January 2011).

As elsewhere, Brazil has been rewarded for its war on fertility with a growing GDP. As soon as fertility began declining in 1965 the GDP began increasing.

The steepest fertility decline took place from 1965 to 1990 when Brazil's contraceptive prevalence rate was on average below 40% and could therefore not have been a factor. Since Cardoso's presidency, the government has made great efforts to increase contraceptive use, which is now at 80%, but has yet to stop covert chemical poisoning.

Abortion is not a factor since it is illegal and allowed only in cases of rape or to save a woman's life. The World Bank deliberately inflates the number of illegal abortions in order to help the government of Brazil conceal its secret program of sterilization.

Brazil is in stage four of the demographic transition.
